RESEARCH INTERESTS

In my research, I explore how individual differences, situational contexts, and marketing strategies shape consumer behaviours, with an emphasis on behaviours that require self-regulation. My interest in this area of study stems from a desire to discover innovative ways to help consumers make choices that can lead to better outcomes, from adopting healthier habits to taking actions to address climate change. This pursuit is important for both theory and practice, contributing to the well-being of both consumers and society. While my current emphasis lies in understanding self-regulation through experimental research, I am open to exploring other avenues of study within the same methodological approach.
